Artificial Intelligence in Higher Education

Artificial intelligence (AI) has become an important part of education in recent years. Many students use AI tools to organize ideas, summarize information, check grammar, and practice foreign languages. Because these tools provide quick answers, they can make studying more efficient and help learners become more confident.

However, universities are also aware of the challenges that AI brings. Some students may be tempted to copy answers without understanding the subject. In addition, AI systems can sometimes provide incomplete or incorrect information. For this reason, teachers encourage students to verify information, compare different sources, and think critically instead of accepting every answer they receive.

Rather than banning AI completely, many educational institutions are choosing to teach students how to use it responsibly. AI can be useful during the planning stage of a project, for brainstorming ideas, or for identifying areas that need improvement. However, students are still expected to do the research, analyze information, and produce original work.

Experts believe that technology should support learning rather than replace it. The goal of education is not simply to find answers quickly but to develop problem-solving skills, creativity, and independent thinking. When used responsibly, AI can become a valuable learning partner, but it cannot replace the effort and judgment that real learning requires.

Adapted from ideas presented in BBC Learning Hub: "AI's Place in Higher Education".

1. What is the main purpose of the article?

- A) To explain why artificial intelligence should replace traditional teaching methods.
- B) To discuss how AI can support learning when used responsibly in higher education.
- C) To compare different AI programs available for university students.
- D) To describe the history of artificial intelligence in education.

2. According to the article, why are many universities choosing to teach students how to use AI instead of simply banning it?

- A) Because AI systems always provide reliable academic information.
- B) Because universities believe responsible use of AI can support learning while students continue developing their own skills.
- C) Because AI has become more accurate than traditional research methods.
- D) Because students are expected to depend on AI throughout their academic studies.

3. What can be inferred about the author's view of artificial intelligence in education?

- A) AI is beneficial only for students with advanced technological knowledge.
- B) AI should be avoided because it discourages independent thinking.
- C) AI is a valuable educational tool, provided that students use it thoughtfully and responsibly.
- D) AI will soon become the main source of learning in universities.

4. Which statement is best supported by the information in the article?

- A) Students benefit most from AI when they use it to replace research and academic writing.
- B) Universities believe AI should be ignored because it has little educational value.
- C) Technology can improve learning, but meaningful education still depends on students' own judgment and participation.
- D) AI is expected to diminish the need for teachers in higher education.

5. Which statement best expresses the author's conclusion?

- A) AI can become a useful learning partner, but it cannot replace the effort, creativity, and critical thinking required for genuine learning.
- B) Artificial intelligence is transforming education, making independent thinking less important.
- C) Universities should prevent students from using AI in any academic activity
- D) The future of education depends entirely on technological innovation.
